years of legacy

VCU MASSEY
CANCER CENTER

The VCU Massey Cancer Center has served as an internationally recognized center of excellence since 1974. As a National Cancer Institute-designated Cancer Center, Massey is dedicated to developing and delivering effective means to prevent, control and, ultimately, to cure cancer.

FROM THE DIRECTOR

In 2008 we celebrated the 25th year that the Cancer Center has been named Massey. We honored that generous commitment given by William E. Massey, Sr., in the best way we could — by earning the renewal of our National Cancer Institute (NCI) designation.

William E. Massey, Jr., Gordon Ginder, MD, and E. Morgan Massey; Bill and Morgan are the son and cousin, respectively, of William E. Massey, Sr., who have carried on the legacy through the Massey Foundation and personal giving.

The NCI renewal process is intricate, exhaustive and illuminating. We were challenged to demonstrate the depth of our research programs, the collaborative nature of our investigations and the scope of our efforts. We presented our accomplishments, in person, to a group of reviewers from 25 NCI centers nationwide, and we provided a 900-page renewal application.

I'm proud of our progress and congratulate all my colleagues who helped re-confirm Massey's status as one of only 64 NCI centers in the country.

With our designation confirmed and feedback in hand, we are now fully prepared to move toward attaining "comprehensive" status, the highest level of recognition the NCI awards. What do we need to do? More research of all types: basic, clinical, translational, and cancer prevention and control. We also need to recruit more nationally recognized cancer researchers to augment our talented group of scientists.

Right now, we have more concepts for new research experiments than ever. They are in the pipeline waiting to get out. One of my colleagues compares the state of cancer research to a fleet of new jets on the runway, fully loaded with highly trained crews and headed for exciting destinations but unable to take off for lack of fuel.

At Massey, we have the ideas, the people and the facilities to go to great places. But without funding, we can't take off. A pilot study alone — to see if a project has merit and should be expanded — can cost anywhere from $50,000 to $250,000. If the initial data from the pilot study are encouraging, then investigators seek further funding from the NCI or other sources. Unfortunately, NCI funding has been cut nationwide for the past few years due to other federal priorities, so fewer proposals are funded.

Despite this lack of funding, I have never been so enthusiastic about the future. Our determination is strengthened by the speed of new advances, but we need to move even more quickly for the millions of people who have cancer. We know that research is the key to prolonging, saving and improving lives.

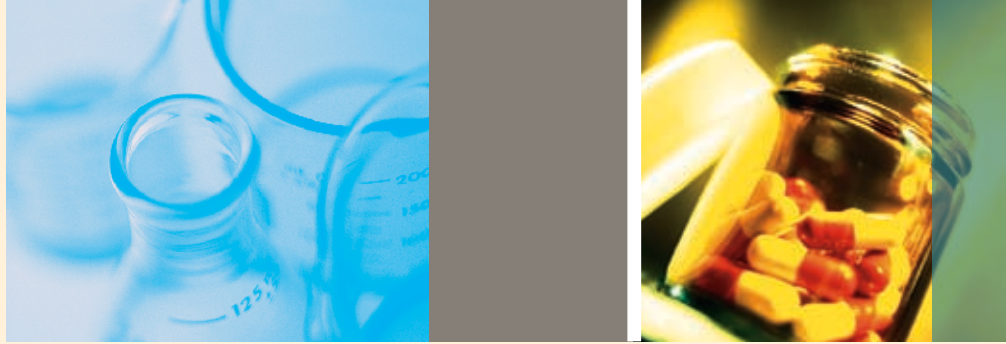

We want to save lives. We know you do, too. Thank you so much for your support, which fuels our efforts. With your help, our research can take off and help more people who face the cancer journey.

Strong collaborations lead to important discoveries

A conversation with three leading researchers

As a National Cancer Institute-designated center, VCU Massey Cancer Center leads and shapes the fight against cancer by offering the best treatments, supported by the latest discoveries and technologies.

Multidisciplinary collaborations among Massey's 500 researchers and staff, and with other leading cancer centers across the country, ensure that the treatments people in Central Virginia need are right here, close to home.

Paul Dent, PhD, Steven Grant, MD, and Paul Fisher, MPH, PhD — three prolific Massey researchers — sat down to talk about the correlation between collaborations and advancements, as well as how private funding supports both.

Q Why is collaboration such an important aspect of research?

Dr. Dent: No one has all of the ideas and all of the answers. Collaboration between many laboratories is intellectual gumbo — a rich stew of ideas that is much more likely to lead to scientific breakthroughs than one or two investigators working together.

Dr. Grant: With the explosion of knowledge in this field, it is impossible for a single researcher to stay on top of every area. Collaborators provide unique insights that might not otherwise be apparent to a researcher whose career has focused on a completely different area of investigation.

Dr. Fisher: The linkage of scientists and clinicians to approach mechanism-of-action studies is instrumental in exploiting our enhanced understanding of the human genome for therapeutic benefit.

Q What are the most exciting studies on the horizon, and what are their implications?

Dr. Dent: Based on data generated in my lab and in collaboration with Drs. Grant and Fisher, we have more clinical trials opening at Massey in the next few years for hematologic cancers, breast cancer and glioblastoma, a form of brain cancer.

Dr. Grant: In addition to discovering new targets amenable to therapeutic intervention, we are just beginning to understand the networks that exist between cancer cell signaling and cell cycle regulatory pathways. An improved understanding of these networks will set the stage for more rational, and hopefully more effective, approaches to combining targeted agents in cancer therapy.

Dr. Fisher: Novel gene and protein-based therapies as well as applications of virotherapy for treating cancer. We have developed cancer therapeutic viruses that selectively replicate in cancer without harming normal cells. By incorporating other genes, these viruses have resulted in complete elimination of primary and distant tumors in animals with melanoma, resistant prostate cancer, breast cancer and pancreatic cancer. These exciting results suggest potential applications for developing an improved therapy for cancer. A third study involves the identification of new molecular markers of disease progression and potential targets for therapeutic intervention. Our lab has identified two very important genes that contribute to cancer development and progression to metastasis.

Q Some say cancer research funding is reaching a crisis stage. Would you agree and, if so, what are the implications?

Dr. Dent: Yes, it is a crisis. Eighty percent of the National Cancer Institute-sponsored Phase I trials have been cut due to a lack of money. (Phase I studies are the earliest phase studies that are just emerging from the laboratory and being delivered to a small number of patients.) Young investigators are not being funded, so we are at risk of losing a generation of researchers.

Dr. Grant: I agree completely. Federal funding has declined dramatically over the last four to five years, and this has very negative implications for the field and for cancer patients in general. We are losing opportunities to exploit dramatic increases in knowledge as well as new technologies that have arisen.

Dr. Fisher: Far too many high-quality research programs are being forced to close because of lack of funding. It is also affecting senior scientists, not just junior and mid-career scientists. The implications are clear: With reduced support for important research, we can expect negative impacts on our ability to treat human diseases.

Q If you had a million dollars to fund a project right now, what would it be?

Dr. Dent: Two pharmaceutical companies have funded two clinical trials here for liver and kidney cancer; however, our drug combination also works very well in pancreatic cancer; melanoma and lung cancer, but the pharmaceuticals are not interested in funding the additional studies. I would use the million dollars to pay for clinical trials for patients suffering from those other cancers. I'd also use the money to fund additional research that shows how we can combine three specific drugs to cause even greater levels of cancer cell death.

Dr. Grant: That's not an easy question to answer, because right now we have a backlog of concepts that we think would qualify, and it would be difficult to choose between them. The direction in which we are heading involves the rational combination of agents that perturb tumor cell signaling pathways, cell cycle regulation and cell death/survival decisions. There are tangible ways in which this strategy could be implemented in the laboratory and clinical arenas.

Dr. Fisher: I would use the money to develop clinical trials for multiple cancers using our cancer terminator virus. The hopeful outcome would be the elimination of both primary tumors and metastases resulting in long-term, disease-free survival, i.e., a "cure" for previously considered terminal diseases.

Paul Dent, PhD, holds the Universal Corporation Distinguished Professorship in Cancer Cell Signaling and is a vice chair of the VCU Department of Biochemistry and Molecular Biology.

Steven Grant, MD, holds the Shirley Carter Olsson and Sture Gordon Olsson Chair in Oncology Research and serves as associate director of translational research for Massey. He was also named Virginia's outstanding scientist in 2007 and is recognized worldwide for his work in developing novel combinations of therapies for hematologic cancers.

Paul Fisher, MPh, PhD, recently joined VCU from Columbia University. In addition to holding the Thelma Newmeyer Corman Endowed Chair in Oncology Research, he serves as director of the VCU Institute of Molecular Medicine and chair of the VCU Department of Human and Molecular Genetics.

Massey earns distinction for treating rare and complex cancers

Last spring, Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield in Virginia awarded Massey the prestigious Blue Distinction Center for Complex and Rare Cancers. Following a thorough review by medical experts, the distinction recognizes Massey's comprehensive inpatient programs for adults — delivered by multidisciplinary teams with subspecialty training — and its distinguished expertise in treating complex and rare subtypes of cancer.

Only 85 of 1,500 cancer centers nationwide have earned this distinction.

“What this distinction means is, if you or a family member has one of these cancers, you really ought to see the experts,” says John D. Roberts, MD, associate director for clinical research at Massey. “Anthem has taken out the guesswork for patients by vetting our expertise.”

The cancers considered by Anthem to be complex and rare include:

- Acute leukemia
- Brain cancer (primary)*
- Esophageal cancer
- Gastric cancer
- Head and neck cancers
- Liver cancer
- Pancreatic cancer

In addition, Massey's Bone Marrow Transplant Program is one of only 70 nationwide to have earned the Blue Distinction for both major types of transplants.

The designation is focused on multidisciplinary treatment planning and complex, major surgical treatments. Treatment teams consist of pathologists, radiologists, surgical oncologists, medical oncologists, radiation oncologists, clinical research nurses and support personnel. The teams are organized by their expertise in specific types of cancers.

“At Massey, we talk as a group about how we're going to manage our patients before we start treating them,” Dr. Roberts says. “This approach is much more likely to happen in a university medical setting where we all know each other and work together.”

Mary Ann Hager, RN, MS, associate director for oncology administration, adds, “Multidisciplinary teams are the basis of how we operate. This approach saves time for the patient and provides more coordinated care and better outcomes.”

Another factor in earning the designation is Massey's ongoing commitment to conducting clinical research and providing patients access to clinical trials.

“We couldn't do clinical trials without the support of our donors because, the fact is, most aspects of our research are not funded by pharmaceutical companies,” Dr. Roberts says. “Research is funded by cancer centers and the money they come up with. We use that funding for research, lab space and equipment. For clinical trials, we need personnel to manage a large volume of data and to provide close interaction and monitoring of patients.”

Complex and rare cancers represent about 15 percent of all cancers treated at Massey.

“While these cancers are a great competency of ours, we also want people to consider that if we spend this much effort treating the most complex cancers, imagine what we can do for all of the other cancers,” Hager says.

* Brain cancers are often treated in conjunction with colleagues in VCU's Harold F. Young Neurosurgical Center.

“What this distinction means is, if you or a family member has one of these cancers, you really ought to see the experts.”

— John D. Roberts, MD

Since William E. Massey, Sr., made his original gift, thousands of other donors have followed his lead.

Generosity & Commitment

Throughout the following pages, we have the pleasure of introducing you to some of our donors and researchers who offer a dynamic combination of resources, intellect and skill. Thanks to your commitment and theirs, through gifts large and small, you are helping to defeat cancer in our lifetimes.

Your generosity inspires our commitment.

Your contributions have helped us:

- Attract and retain the best researchers, such as Paul Fisher, MPh, PhD, who recently joined Massey from Columbia University, and Steven Grant, MD, a longtime Massey researcher with decades of NCI research awards
- Provide critical seed money for promising pilot research projects to generate preliminary data to be competitive for national peer-reviewed funding
- Offer bridge funding for exceptional ongoing research to keep research moving forward in this difficult economic climate
- Make more than 100 cutting-edge clinical trials available to patients, offering them the latest therapies to treat and prevent cancer
- Conduct research in cancer prevention and control to understand how to keep people from getting cancer and to control it with the least possible harm
- Underwrite stimulating seminar programs that bring in nationally renowned experts from across the country
- Provide accurate and personalized information for our patients through the patient resource libraries and community education programs
- Maintain our state-of-the-art laboratory research equipment
- Keep our Healing Garden a welcoming respite for patients and families

- Create endowed chairs and professorships for our finest physician-scientists and researchers to recruit and retain excellence

This past year, more than 15,000 individuals, corporations, foundations and organizations chose to support Massey Cancer Center, contributing nearly $9 million in fiscal year 2008. We are amazed at the number — a 40 percent increase over last year — but we are even more honored by the 15,000 reasons why they gave, either through direct gifts, annual giving support, planned giving or the more than 30 special events held on Massey's behalf. Each of these gifts was prompted by a personal concern to save lives through cancer research.

Our donors come from all over Virginia and beyond, underscoring the broad reach of Massey and the widespread generosity of our supporters. We treasure the unwavering relationships with so many donors who have given over the years — and welcome the newfound dedication of thousands of new donors.

Support from the community is critical if we are to advance promising research. Philanthropic dollars continue to provide a major portion of funding for Massey's research enterprise. With competition increasing among researchers for fewer federal research dollars, we must rely more heavily on the commitment of our community — and are intensely grateful for this unwavering support.

Honor Roll of Donors

The generosity of more than 15,000 individuals, corporations and foundations provided the resources necessary to advance nationally recognized research that improves care. We are grateful and honored by their commitment.

SPECIAL GIFTS

Massey Cancer Center is very fortunate to have major support from many individuals, foundations and corporations that continue to make significant gifts. Their generosity funds basic, translational and clinical cancer research and assists with the recruitment of world-renowned cancer researchers to Massey, as part of our Research for Life and Research Roundtable funding programs. We are ever grateful to these donors for making a significant investment in the future of the Massey Cancer Center.

GENEROSITY & COMMITMENT

PARTNERING WITH CORPORATIONS

Many of VCU Massey Cancer Center’s corporate partners, such as Owens & Minor, share its mission to serve the community. This generous and longstanding relationship with Massey inspires the Fortune 500 company and fuels innovations created by Massey’s researchers.

“An integral part of our mission and vision focuses on the communities we serve,” says G. Gilmer Minor III, chairman and retired CEO of Owens & Minor. “We have been partnering with Massey for many years, and it has been a most rewarding relationship. Our teammates have a passion for making a difference. When they see the strides being made by Massey, they get energized. There is no greater feeling than knowing that one has made a difference in the life of someone else. Partnering with Massey makes that feeling come true, every day.”

Steven Grant, MD, shares this passion for making a difference. An internationally recognized researcher and associate director of translational research, he has taken many novel concepts from the lab to patients through clinical trials. Many of his discoveries have sent hematologic cancers into remission and helped set the new national standards of care that patients receive today.

GENEROSITY & COMMITMENT

GIVING IT THEIR ALL: TIME, MONEY AND TALENT

In 1996, a group of concerned volunteers, including Missy Ryan, held the first Women & Wellness Valentine Luncheon to benefit breast cancer research. Ryan engaged corporate underwriting and also served as chair for the burgeoning event in 1998 and 1999.

Volunteer Mary Bliley co-chaired a spin-off project, Ribbons for Research, in 1998, and chaired the Women & Wellness event in 2007. Both women have supported Massey through their volunteerism, individual giving and ability to draw in others to crusade for breast cancer research.

Today, the Women & Wellness Forum Series serves as a signature fundraising event for Massey that includes a breakfast and a luncheon at The Jefferson Hotel.

This series has helped move discoveries forward, including breast cancer studies conducted through Massey's Immune Mechanisms Program, co-led by renowned surgical oncologist Harry D. Bear, MD, PhD. In addition, Dr. Bear heads Massey's Breast Health Center, a national leader in a team approach to treating breast cancer.

GENEROSITY & COMMITMENT

HELPING YESTERDAY, TODAY AND TOMORROW

As a founding member of Massey's Cancer Advisory Board in 1984, Elinor Marshall worked closely with the Center's first director, Dr. Walter Lawrence, Jr. Today, the board continues to expand its reach and engage others in support of the Center so that researchers have the resources they need to conduct cutting-edge research.

Having a family member diagnosed with cancer instilled Marshall's passion for finding ways to advance research. "I treasure my association with the Massey Cancer Center — a giant in cancer research. And I'm especially proud to continue to work with Dr. Lawrence, whom I consider a 'larger-than-life' humanitarian, in promoting Massey's planned giving program, The Lawrence Society, named in his honor."

Marshall's commitment, which began more than 30 years ago, will live on through a thoughtful planned gift designed to ensure that her estate makes an annual donation to the Center in perpetuity.

Legislative thanks

In Virginia's most recent biennial budget, research at the VCU Massey Cancer Center received a generous boost, resulting in an annual allocation of $1 million for cancer research. An additional one-time $5.9 million was designated for the critically needed renovation of a state-of-the-art vivarium for our researchers. We are deeply grateful for this vote of confidence.

During our first Massey Day on the Hill, our Advisory Board members, community volunteers, researchers and clinical staff walked the halls of the General Assembly Building. They were struck with the warm response they received from legislators and staff alike. Stories of personal connections with cancer marked every conversation.

We greatly appreciate Gov. Tim Kaine's support for this research initiative. Of particular note was the enthusiastic leadership of Speaker of the House of Delegates William Howell, who along with his wife, Cessie, is a dedicated and articulate advocate for cancer research. Del. John O'Bannon, MD, and Sen. John Watkins were the principal sponsors for our request for funding. Other longtime strong supporters Sen. Walter Stosch and Del. Frank Hall continued to work with their colleagues on Massey's behalf.

We thank the entire legislature for its foresight in funding cancer research. With the drop in federal research dollars, state funding is becoming more essential. We salute the commonwealth's understanding of how high-level cancer research contributes to improved quality of life and economic development, and we embrace this public-private partnership.

SUPPORTING OUR MISSION THROUGH FOUNDATIONS

Brenda Eggleston and her family's foundation, the Cecil R. and Edna S. Hopkins Family Foundation, continually find special ways to support the VCU Massey Cancer Center. Recently, Eggleston named one of the vibrant planting sections in the Healing Garden at the Goodwin Research Laboratory for her parents. In addition, the foundation established the Cecil R. and Edna S. Hopkins Family Foundation Cancer Research Fund at Massey, providing unrestricted funding for worthwhile research projects at the director's discretion.

"Cancer has touched our lives significantly, and we are thankful to have the opportunity to give back and make a difference in this way," Eggleston says.

Support from foundations large and small helps researchers such as Cathy Bradley, PhD, a health economist and co-leader of Massey's Cancer Prevention and Control Program, to conduct studies on other factors affecting cancer treatment and outcomes, such as insurance and employment.

RAISING COMMUNITY AWARENESS

As a cancer survivor, Barbara Brown knows the importance of prevention and this knowledge drives her to raise community awareness through programs and events offered by the VCU Massey Cancer Center.

Brown knows that research will benefit others who are faced with a cancer diagnosis. "We all have gifts and talents we can offer to stem this rampant disease — and to help Massey keep helping others," says the seasoned educator who carries Massey's messages in presentations in neighborhoods, churches, schools and the news media.

Community involvement and funding helps Laura A. Siminoff, PhD, associate director of Massey's Cancer Prevention and Control Program, undertake exciting research projects, such as her current study on delays in colon cancer diagnosis among African-Americans. Such studies provide understanding of how to intervene with cancer sooner and save more lives.

PALLIATIVE CARE PROGRAM

The Thomas Palliative Care Unit strives to prevent and relieve suffering and to support the best possible quality of life for patients and their families. This exceptional program is a national model and a leader in the palliative care field.

Research highlights

Spearheading clinical studies

- Steven Grant, MD, associate director for translational research, opened an NCI-sponsored, Phase II clinical study to examine the effects of a novel drug combination on two sub-types of non-Hodgkin's lymphoma. Participating cancer centers include those from U.N.C.-Chapel Hill, Vanderbilt University, Cornell University and the H. Lee Moffitt Cancer Research Institute, among others.

Improving the efficacy of chemotherapy

- Sarah Spiegel, PhD, co-leader of the Cancer Cell Biology Program, found that the anti-cancer drug doxorubicin killed colon and breast cancer cells more efficiently when the enzyme SphK2 was removed from the cells. This study shows that SphK2 sensitizes cancer cells to chemotherapy and may be a possible new therapeutic target to improve the efficacy of chemotherapy for colon and breast cancer.

Combining agents to kill cancer

- Supported by grants from the NCI and the V Foundation, Paul Dent, PhD, vice chair of the VCU Department of Biochemistry and Molecular Biology, and Steven Grant, MD, associate director for translational research, published findings that two novel anti-cancer compounds, sorafenib and vorinostat, work together to kill liver, kidney and pancreatic tumor cells in vitro. A Phase I clinical trial will open in 2009 for patients with liver or kidney cancer.

Fighting metastatic disease

- Paul Fisher, MPh, PhD, uncovered how a gene, mda-7/IL-24, induces a bystander effect that kills cancer cells without harming healthy ones. This discovery could lead to new therapeutic strategies to fight metastatic disease, which is one of the primary challenges in cancer therapy.

Studying health economics

- Cathy Bradley, PhD, co-leader of the Cancer Prevention and Control Program, received $3 million in funding from the NCI to study how employer-based health insurance affects decisions women with breast cancer make regarding treatment options and working. Her team will follow 500 women with breast cancer for the next five years. Findings from this study may translate to health policy issues.

GENEROSITY & COMMITMENT

BUILDING A FAMILY TRADITION

As long-time Massey supporters, Harry Grandis and his family's connection to Massey and its mission increased even more after daughter Linda Grandis Blatt lost her battle with cancer in April 2006.

Betty Sue Grandis LePage recalls her sister requesting prolonged chemotherapy treatments because she saw each day as hope for a cure.

The family established a lung cancer research fund in order to benefit others who are faced with a cancer diagnosis. Grandis says, "It's important to produce the finest research at Massey and have access to the best available cancer treatment here in Richmond."

Betty Sue's husband, Todd LePage, is also a cancer survivor. "Having loved ones fighting cancer gives me even more reason to be passionate about cancer research," she says.

Research funds enable Massey to offer patients a menu of more than 100 clinical trials. John D. Roberts, MD, associate director for clinical research, oversees this critical program that brings discoveries safely and quickly from the bench to the bedside — and ensures that Massey patients have access to the latest treatments unavailable elsewhere in the community.

EVENTS

ANTHEM GURNEY TOURNEY SEPT. 15, 2007

Massey staff and volunteers fielded three gurney teams and one obstacle course in the Anthem Gurney Tourney. Thanks to the MCV Hospital Auxiliary of VCU, the Pediatric Cancer Research Fund at Massey received more than $53,000 from this event.

ANTHEM LIVE! DEC. 6, 2007

Anthem hosted the "Anthem LIVE! The Ticket to Fight Cancer" tennis match at the Old Dominion University Constant Center in Norfolk, Va. Tennis matches between Mardy Fish and James Blake, and Serena Williams and Tatiana Golovin were the highlights. Thanks to Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield, this event netted $58,984.

ANTHEM'S QUEST FOR THE CURE JUNE 21, 2008

The Second Annual Quest for the Cure was held at the University of Richmond Stadium and throughout Carytown as supporters, sponsors and friends went on a treasure hunt to benefit the Jamie Hess Fund at Massey. More than 26 teams competed and raised almost $10,000.

OFFERING UNRESTRICTED FUNDING

In 1984 Adrienne Maxwell, a charter member of Massey's Advisory Board, founded Massey Club, the leadership gift society that recognizes the impact of unrestricted gifts. "I knew that Massey needed a ready and renewable source of funding that could be used quickly where the need was greatest," she says. "It was also important to have a regular program that reminded people every year of Massey's mission and how they could help."

Over the years, Massey Club has grown significantly — this year raising $1.5 million in support of all aspects of Massey's research enterprise — from funding pilot research projects to underwriting administrative needs.

World-class researchers such as Andrew P. Lerner, MD, PhD, benefit greatly from the solid infrastructure Massey Club helps to provide. As co-leader of Massey's Immune Mechanisms research program, he has spawned global research interest in cytokines — the chemical messenger molecules that can stimulate or inhibit the growth and activity of various immune cells. His work also explores the interactions between a cell's surface, nucleus and mitochondria, and how stress can affect these components.

SWING FOR A CURE HIGHLANDS GOLF TOURNAMENT SEPT. 13, 2007

Organized and hosted by Advisory Board member George Emerson, the second annual golf tournament at the Country Club at The Highlands was a sold-out event raising funds for breast, head and neck cancer research at Massey. A pre-event dinner and auction held the night before the event and a morning and afternoon tournament raised $250,000.

PROVIDING FUTURE LEADERSHIP

While cancer strikes at all ages, it usually does not affect young adults. This fact does not impede Holly Claytor and the members of Massey Alliance, the junior board of the VCU Massey Cancer Center, from their commitment to helping researchers find better treatments and, some day, cures. Whether holding a fundraiser or holding a cancer patient's hand, this group of young professionals ensures Massey's future.

"At some point in life, most people will be touched by cancer," says Claytor, president of the Massey Alliance. "We all have the opportunity to help change the startling statistics, and we have been working toward that goal since the Massey Alliance's inception seven years ago.

"Through our volunteer efforts, we're proud to say we've raised more than $200,000 to support cancer research," she adds. "We also hope we've raised awareness for the Massey Cancer Center, because it's so important that people realize they can benefit from this incredible resource right here in Virginia."

Omar Mian, an MD-PhD student working on cutting-edge research in the laboratory of Gordon Ginder, MD, and a member of the Massey Alliance, continues this commitment — already making significant discoveries in the lab that have been recognized by his colleagues at the Center. Now in his fifth of seven years of medical and scientific studies, this ready spokesman and accomplished scientist plans to become an oncologist and continue cancer research, too.

BEGINNING EARLY TO SUPPORT CANCER RESEARCH

As five talented Pocahontas Middle School students proved, you are never too young to touch lives and change your world. Through a school project and with minimal adult support, their Wellesley 5k race raised substantial funds for pediatric cancer research at Massey last May.

“We were assigned to do a community service project so we could realize how one person or one group can change lives and futures,” explains Myles Hilliard, an eighth-grader at Pocahontas.

He and his fellow Hawks decided to raise money for pediatric cancer research because one of their classmates recently recovered from cancer and another friend’s sister was diagnosed with leukemia.

Kamar Godder, MD, MPH, professor and chair in pediatric hematology oncology, leads VCU’s efforts to treat children with leukemia, lymphoma or other blood diseases — many of which involve bone marrow transplants that require lengthy hospital stays.

“The survival rates for leukemia have improved dramatically over the years because of research,” Dr. Godder says. “But if you have ever talked to the parent of a sick child, you know that more work needs to be done until we have a 100 percent survival rate.”

GENEROSITY & COMMITMENT

SUPPORTING THE PROMISE OF RESEARCH

By establishing a charitable lead trust, Martha Newell created a steady and substantial stream of revenue for the VCU Massey Cancer Center to build its brain tumor research program in honor of her grandson, Carrington Williams.

"It's important for my family and me to know that we're helping, even just a little, to make cancer a thing of the past," she explains. "We know it will take time, but we also believe that Massey is conducting the kind of research that will lead to a breakthrough — and it's happening right here in Richmond."

At Massey, breakthrough research happens because of scientists such as Paul Dent, PhD, vice chair of the VCU Department of Biochemistry and Molecular Biology. A key researcher at Massey, one of his projects leverages collaborative findings on a gene that suppresses tumors to develop a clinical trial for treating glioblastomas, a form of brain tumor.

VIRGINIA WINE EXPO FEB. 15-16, 2008

This first-time event attracted more than 5,000 guests during its two-day run at the Richmond Convention Center. Focusing on Virginia wineries and education about wine, the event raised $1,000 for Massey, which provided more than 135 volunteers and 300 volunteer hours to the event.

WELLESLEY 5K FUN RUN MAY 17, 2008

In response to a class assignment to "do something that will impact your community," five eighth-graders from Pocohontas Middle School set out to organize and produce a 5k. In less than two months' time, the event raised more than $20,000 and attracted 100-plus runners. It was an amazing event from an amazing group of kids.

GENEROSITY & COMMITMENT

RECOGNIZING EXCELLENCE

Jeanette S. Lipman has always had an eye for excellence. Knowing that establishing an endowed chair would help retain and recruit a researcher of national stature, she created the Eric and Jeanette Lipman Chair in Oncology. Now an emeritus member of the VCU Massey Cancer Center's Advisory Board, her association with the Cancer Center goes back more than 20 years. In that time, she says, "Being a part, though small, of the support system for research at Massey Cancer Center has been a source of comfort and satisfaction for me. Every day our outstanding team of researchers works to uncover the complexities of cancer."

Gordon Ginder, MD, holder of the chair she established, says proudly, "As I have said many times, Jeanette Lipman played a major role in my decision to come to Massey Cancer Center 10 years ago. Her support of excellence for our Center has never wavered."

GENEROSITY & COMMITMENT

WORKING TOGETHER TO ERADICATE CANCER

With so many family and friends having been affected by cancer and helped by the VCU Massey Cancer Center, the Stepanian family wanted to do something to help provide better treatments and improved quality of life for anyone with cancer. Believing that research serves as the foundation to real hope, they established the Stepanian Family Cancer Research Fund to promote promising research, with a preference for lung research in memory of Celia Balducci Stepanian. “It’s a family, personal and business commitment,” says Leon Stepanian, whose son Mark serves on Massey’s Advisory Board and whose company, Loveland Distributing, supports many Massey fundraising events. “We’re directing all our resources to fight this terrible disease.”

Mitchell Anscher, MD, co-leader of Massey’s Radiation Biology and Oncology Program, works to advance cancer research. A national expert in the treatment of prostate cancer, he ensures that Massey’s radiation oncology program provides the latest care backed by research, whether using new technology to treat hard-to-reach tumors, or new methods of delivering higher doses more safely and precisely to patients.

ABOUT OUR DONOR LISTINGS

We greatly appreciate every gift, large and small. However, because of space limitations, we can only list contributions of $100 and more.

- Massey Cancer Center, as an organizational component of Virginia Commonwealth University, does not have a separate audited financial statement.
- We make every effort to ensure that our donor lists are correct, but occasionally errors occur. If we have inadvertently left off your name or listed you incorrectly, please accept our sincere apologies. If you have questions, please contact our development office at (804) 828-1450 or teammasssey@vcu.edu.
